Making Arrangements

Arranging for the cremation, interment, or funeral of a loved one or someone significant in your life can be a hard thing to do at a stressful time. You may feel less pressure if you are able to plan ahead, but there is no “right way” to do this.

When a death occurs on the Inpatient Unit

The care team will ensure your loved one’s body is handled with dignity and respect. Let them know if you have already made arrangements for cremation or interment, and they will contact your designated service provider. You will also need to speak to the funeral service provider to initiate the service. If you have not yet made arrangements, you can select a service provider listed in this brochure.

When a death occurs at home

The Province of BC developed the Joint Protocol for Expected/Planned Home Deaths in British Columbia to support people to die at home with their families or caregivers. The Protocol provides guidance to people at the end of life, their families, and health care providers about expected/ planned natural home deaths. It provides clarity to roles, responsibilities, and activities involved in a home death. Search “after a death” on the BC government website to learn more.

What happens next?

The death must be registered with the Vital Statistics Agency. Death registration consists of the following steps:

- ▶ A medical practitioner, nurse practitioner, or coroner completes and signs the Medical Certification of Death within 48 hours after the death and forwards it to the designated funeral director.
- ▶ The funeral director registers the death when they have the Medical Certification of Death and the necessary information about the person who died.

The funeral director will need to know:

- Full legal name
- Date of birth
- Birthplace
- Personal Health Number
- Social Insurance Number
- Occupation
- Spouse’s name and maiden name, if applicable
- Full name of father and father’s birthplace
- Full name of mother (maiden name) and mother’s birthplace
- Method of disposition (burial or cremation)

The funeral director issues a death certificate and a disposition permit.

Financial Support For Funeral Services

Ministry of Social Development and Poverty Reduction

There may be assistance for BC residents who don’t have resources for funeral expenses. All Victoria funeral homes accept this service, but they prefer a family member to contact the ministry directly.
